If such non-OPEC suppliers as Britain, Norway and the Soviet Union continue to ignore OPEC warnings, Sheikh Yamani said, those facts probably will include "very violent" fluctuations in price.

From the current range of rough-ly $25 to $30 a barrel for most grades of crude, prices could plunge below $20 during the summer, then resurge to present levels or higher in winter, he said.

Despite the risk of a price-drop, he said, Saudi Arabia was determined to keep production near its quota of 435 million barrels a day set by OPEC agreement, He estimated that his country, which owns about a quarter of proven world oil reserves, would produce four million barrels a day this month, up from a 20-year low of about two

He said that "for the time being" kingdom did not intend to exceed its quota. But if other OPEC members continued to exceed theirs, the Sandis would be free to do the same, Sheikh Yamani said. "Our policy is that if it's free for some, it's free for all," he said.

Saudi Arabia has capacity to produce as much as 10 million barrels a day, more than a sixth of world consumption, as it did at times in the late 1970s, the minister noted .

The actual production level depend on market conditions, Sheikh Yamani said, but he emphasized that the Sandis would no longer reduce their output unilaterally to prop up prices.

"We abandoned the policy of carrying the burden alone," he said.
For OPEC members in general, a greater share of the world market is a must," he said. The cartel's share has slumped to roughly a third of world sales from two-thirds in the late 1970s. Sheikh Yamani said that he thought that a price war would increase OPEC's share.

During the coming winter, Sheikh Yamani predicted that oil prices would be stable to slightly higher. Extremely low investories of crude and some refined products have buoyed prices in recent WASHINGTON — With less than two weeks remaining before the Geneva meeting between President Ronald Reagan and Mikhail S. the main goal of the summit meeting: having Mr. Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev get to know each other and the issues better, and to agree on the need to keep in contact on a more regular basis.

But the hopes expressed recently by some American officials that an agreement on arms-control principles might be worked out along with a communique on East-West relations that did more than list differences seemed to have been dashed, officials said.

Mr. Gorbachev struck the Americans as tough and intelligent.
American officials said, but not well versed on foreign affairs and

A top American official complained Wednesday about the continued Soviet demand for an end to the space-based missile defense program. The Kremlin leadership really hasn't yet absorbed the technical aspects of arms control, nor the conceptual aspects of deter-rence," he said.

The senior official said Mr. Gorbachev believed that "American policy is heavily influenced by a small circle of extremists who are anti-Soviet.

He said the Soviet leader "seemed to have a rather imperfect view of Ronald Reagan's view of East-West relations."

The official insisted that Mr. Reagan, though not an admirer of the Soviet system, was more than ready to live with it and that this was not recognized by Moscow.

American officials said there was a lack of concrete suggestions on arms control from the Soviet side in Moscow, and suggested that the Soviet leadership had made a policy decision not to make any important agreements with the Unit-ed States before the Communist Party congress due in February. Nevertheless, the officials said that for the first time in any highlevel Soviet-American meeting, human rights was discussed at length.

At the talks Monday, Mr. Shultz pointed out that the United States was a nation of immigrants and that politicians reflect the strongly held American belief that people should have a right to emigrate.

In response, the Soviet foreign minister, Eduard A. Shevardnadze, and Mr. Gorbachev countered with the Soviet view that human rights was best served by full employment, free medical and educational services and inexpensive housing. which the Soviet Union provides its

The United States and Soviet Union agreed to resume annual conferences, beginning Nov. II-15, on preventing dangerous incidents at sea.

The resumption comes five months after the shooting of a U.S. Army major in East Germany led to a breakdown in the talks.

Gulf Rulers Warn of 'Escalation' in Iran-Iraq War

By John Kifner

MUSCAT, Oman - The conservative rulers of the Gulf wound up their annual meeting this week with a warning that the "recent escala- war. tion" of the Iran-Iraq war threatened the stability of the region and freedom of navigation in its waters.

The war and the fears of spreading terrorism in the Middle East were the major topics at the sixth meeting of the Gulf Cooperation Council, officials and diplomats

While the Arab Gulf states have tended to support Iraq out of fear of Moslem fundamentalism, diplomats said that there have been signs that they would like to ease relations with Iran, largely in hopes of warding off terror or attempts to export revolution.

Some analysts saw hints of this move toward a more evenhanded position in the statement issued Wednesday, noting that the reference to the "recent escalation" appeared to refer to Iraqi air strikes against the key Iranian oil terminal

U.S. Senator Bids to Delay Departure of Soviet Sailor

By Philip Shenon New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Senator Jesse Helms has decided to subpoena a Soviet sailor, who jumped ship in Louisiana, to appear before the Senate Agriculture Committee, aides said. They termed the move an effort to delay the man's departure from the United States.

The decision came as the Justice Department announced that a Romanian sailor had left his ship Wednesday near Jacksonville,

That sailor, identified as Stefan Vernea, was interviewed Wednesday by immigration officials and has sought political asylum, officials said.

Congressional aides said that Mr. Helms, a Republican of North Carolina who is chairman of the Agriculture Committee, had the power to subpoena the Soviet sail-or, Miroslav Medvid.

But was unclear whether the Senate would be able to remove Mr. Medvid from the Soviet freighter, the Marshal Konev, anchored in the Mississippi River.

The ship was scheduled to leave the United States on Friday, Mr. Medvid leaped into the river on Oct. 24 but was returned to the ship by U.S. authorities in circumstances that remain in dispute. He was later interviewed by officials of the State Department. The State Department said it was convinced the sailor wanted to return to the Soviet Union. The decision infuriated conservative groups and Ukrainian-American activists. According to aides to Mr. Helms, Mr. Medvid would be brought to Washington, ostensibly to testify before the committee about the incident's consequences for trade in grain.

A Senate lawyer who asked not to be named said, however, that it might be impossible to find a federal judge to enforce the subpoena since the matter was primarily one of foreign policy, which is not the responsibility of the courts.

Law enforcement officials said Mr. Vernea, the other sailor, refused to return to a Romanian ship docked in Florida. Unlike the Soviet sailor, who swam to shore, Mr. Vernea was on shore leave when he decided to seek asylum.

Last Chapter of Defector's Defection Started in a Washington Restaurant

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - Vitaly Yurchenko's dramatic return to Moscow began last Saturday at a fern-decorated restaurant a few blocks from the Soviet Union's embassy compound, according to intelligence

The sources said Mr. Yurchenko arrived at the restaurant, Au Pied de Cochon, in the company of a single CIA officer. According to intelligence sources, Mr. Yurchenko said: "What would you do if I got up and walked out? Would you shoot me?"

The CIA officer said, "No, we don't treat defectors that way." "I'll be back in 15 or 20 minutes," Mr. Yurchenko said. "If I'm not, it's not your fault." A source said that Mr. Yurchenko then left the restaurant. He was not pursued up the busy street by the CIA officer. Ives Courbois, the restaurant's owner, said he was planning to sell a "Yurchenko shooter," a mixed drink.

Mistrial Ruled In Spy Case Of Former FBI Agent

LOS ANGELES - The espionage trial of Richard W. Miller, a ormer agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, has ended in a mistrial after the jurors said they were hopelessly deadlocked.

The mistrial was declared Wednesday by U.S. District Judge David V. Kenyon after the jury had deliberated for 14 days. Mr. Miller, 48, was the first FBI agent in history to be charged with espionage. The charge grew out of his activities with a Russian emigre couple who the government contended were agents of the KGB, the Soviet intelligence service. Until shortly before his arrest on Oct. 2, 1984, Mr. Miller had been a counterespionage specialist in the FBI's Los Angeles office.

The prosecution immediately said the government would seek to retry Mr. Miller as soon as possible on the same seven espionage counts accusing him of passing FBI documents to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Miller's two alleged Soviet co-conspirators, Nikolai and Svetlana Ogorodnikov, were convicted in an earlier trial,

Standards in London's Leading Hotels Ever Higher

IVALRY among London's leading hotels is intense, and attracting guests in such a competitive field is an art. Managers are well aware that a full hotel this year does not necessarily mean the same thing next year - however faithful your clientèle. As a result hotels have become more and more opulent, and the new entrants in the City of Westminster (and very occasionally near the square mile of the actual City of London) are immediate objects of professional curiosity.

The New Piccadilly has had what the trade calls 'a soft opening', and its emergence to join the select group of top five-star hotels has been carefully watched. What new allurements is this hotel (actually a grand old Edwardian hotel, just off Piccadilly Circus).

Famine Is • Ending in Sub-Sahara

ROME - The head of the UN Food and Agriculture Organiza-tion said Thursday that acute famine was ending in much of Africa because the food supply had improved dramatically in countries bordering the Sahara that were affected by drought

The agency said that the number of African countries with critical solvent and the service of a biannula food shortages had dropped from 21 to five: Ethiopia, Sudan, Angola, Botswana and Mozambique.
Speaking on the eve of a biannual conference of agriculture minis-ters from more than 100 FAO member countries, the agency's di-rector-general, Edouard Saouma,

The conference opens as the most painful chapter of this decade: gradually, and thankfully, comes to a close: the acute famme in Africa.

"FAO staff and crop assessment missions confirm in many Sahelian countries the 1985 harvest now available will be an all-time re-

The total production of food in the eight countries on the semi-arid fringe of the Sahara, he said, will be 6.3 million metric tons, more than 50 percent higher than the 4 million metric tons last year.

But these countries — Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Chad, Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, Niger and Sene-gal — remain heavily dependent on imports to meet chronic food shortages and need long-term planning programs, he said.

FAO surveys also show that the number of malnourished people in the developing countries has dropped significantly, Mr. Saouma This is the first time we have detected such a decline."

Blaming the Messenger

The new curbs that South Africa has imposed on reporting of the country's sorrows and disorders will hinder the world's understanding. Worse, they may prolong them. The huge, rebellious black majority lacks for any real communication in that deeply divided society. Independent press accounts have offered about the only public outlet for their grievances. To curtail is to inflame.

Henceforth journalists working in South Africa will need police permission to report on disturbances in non-white areas covered by a three-month-old emergency decree. Unless they agree to a police escort, reporters may face up to 10 years in prison for covering anything from stone-throwing and school boycotts to work stoppages. Without permission no person may photograph, record or even sketch what is happening in these areas for dissemination within or outside the republic.

This blinkering will not affect South Africa's state television, whose reporting of racial conflict is routinely sanitized. It will somewhat inhibit South African newspapers, already hobbled by censorship. But the real target is foreign journalists, especially foreign television. The new restraints, depending on how they are enforced, could seal South Africa's black townships from outside scrutiny.

Verifiable reports of unrest have caused skittish foreign investors to pull back from South Africa. Lack of verifiable accounts risks something worse - rumor, exaggeration and anger. The Pretoria regime accuses the news media of inciting violence. Crowds surely do behave differently when the cameras are rolling and people who mobilize crowds know television's magnifying electrifying effect.

Television coverage of police mailing unarmed demonstrators has struck apartheid where it hurts: on the world's evening news. But banning cameras will not restore social peace. Nor will it enhance a beleaguered regime's credibility, at home or abroad.

President P.W. Botha has yet to find solid political ground between those who clamor for reform and extremists who have just beaten his National Party in a parliamentary by-election. Unable to build a consensus for reform within South Africa and angry at the world press for showing how much it is needed, he now blames the messenger for the message. The message. however, reverberates: Fire!

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The Yurchenko Affair

The turnabout of Vitaly Yurchenko drives stunned observers to the full range of theories created to deal with the murk of espionage. Always a favorite is a theory of Soviet wizardry which holds, in this instance, that the KGB cleverly planned the defection and redefection of one of its elite officials to embarrass the CLA or to weaken Ronald Reagan's summit hand. Another is that Mr. Yurchenko was caught up in the peculiar confusion of motives and roles to which, if the spy novels have it right, people in the business of deception are especially prone. A third theory is that in the last year or so a cataclysm in the whole system of international espionage has created among agents and intelligence services a pervasive sense of insecurity, of familiar moorings being lost, and has resulted in a series of defections and unmaskings that may not yet have come to an end. A fourth school holds that Mr. Yurchenko was not nearly so big a fish as was generally supposed when he was caught. You do not have to be able to plumb the depths of this case on the Soviet side, however, to have disturbing questions about the manner in which it was handled on the American side. From the first exultant leaks to the press about the catch of a blue-chip defector, to the glee freely expressed in the resultant sure discomfort of the KGB, the CIA and those influenced by its briefings in Congress and elsewhere have acted in a strangely incautious and amateurish way. It is not clear that professional procedures to ascertain the bona fides of a defector, and to retain the confidence of this difficult breed, were followed closely. Early on, according to what has been reported. Mr. Yurchenko enjoyed cozy meetings in a social setting with the CIA's brass. Somehow a ranking Soviet officer still in the stage of debriefing was watched so laxly that he could make his way to a Soviet haven in Washington.

Mr. Yurchenko, in his press conference on Monday, had every reason to give a report that he thought might ease his passage home in what are bound to be severe circumstances. His observations on the way he was treated by his temporary American hosts have to be taken skeptically. People who do the work he chose can have no illusions about the unforgiving nature of the world they inhabit.

We understand that there are facts and relationships that have to be held secret in these matters. But Americans also need a reliable explanation of what happened in this apparently unprecedented case. They need to know how the CIA let itself be made a fool of in so incredible a fashion, and how responsibility for it is to be assumed - and by whom.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

Other Opinion

Before the Summit. Yurchenko

Having first taken the propaganda initiative, the Russians now appear to be playing down the summit prospects. Yet both sides are wise enough to know that as far as Western Europe is concerned this is no longer, if it ever was, a propaganda battle but a genuine argument about matters of substance. There will be some weariness if the main endeavor is to cast the blame on the other side.

It seems just possible that the carefully staged [Vitaly] Yurchenko demarche was part of a process of blame distribution, should that prove necessary in two weeks' time. If so it was not a success. Rather than seek to embarrass each other, the two sides could better spend the remaining interval on sweetening rather than souring the atmosphere.

- The Guardian (London).

When the KGB man held his press conference, the CIA inexcusably froze, giving the Russians a propaganda field day with a phony charge that one of their men had been kidnapped and tortured, and had heroically escaped from a restaurant in Georgetown. Belatedly. friends of the CIA are fanning out all over town to assure us that poor Vitaly was merely a heartbroken lover, rejected by a Soviet diplomat's wife who was willing to play around with a KGB colonel but not a defector. Critics of the CIA say that the KGB man was not properly "nurtured" by his handlers. and that if he had been pampered and loved he would never have "changed his mind."

Both theories overlook the fact that this spy is a trained liar who long ago chose deception as a way of life. In the grand tradition of Yuri Nosenko, he was a fake defector. He came over to make America's spooks look like saps and titillate the FBI with dark hints about congressional aides. Presumably he has discredited polygraph tests for years to come. Task force chief Colin Thompson should have given him a rigorous, skeptical debriefing, and quarantined him on suspicion of carrying contagious disinformation. The slim pickings offered, and the Russian's failure to supply the names of assets known to have reported to him in Canada, should have set off warning bells: instead he was embraced and touted in the worst example of CIA naïvetė since William Colby fired James Angleton and vouched for the planted Yuri Nosenko, No wonder so many of us suspect that Mount Aito moles burrow where orchids used to grow.

Hard Times for Oil Exporters

- Columnist William Safire.

Times are hard for oil producers. Every producer, it seems, has its own special need for increasing production. Topping the list is probably Mexico, which has a billion-dollar earthquake repair bill. The Iranians and Iragis are still at each other's throats and thus sell indiscriminately to anyone. Nigeria is cashstarved. Britain is running its North Sea wells dry and could collapse once its reserves are used up, a study on the economy's future recently said. Malaysia is in similar straits.

Compared with others, the country's problems seem mild. But oil production will increase by 18 percent next year to maintain its share to government revenue. Although OPEC still has an official selling price, the fact is that OPEC's official price structure bears no resemblance to reality today. [Therefore] OPEC members have no choice but to stick to the agreed 16 million barrels per day in order to protect the market. Declining oil prices mean revenue shortfalls and less development among developing oil producers. For financially strapped countries such as Mexico, Nigeria and Indonesia, it means further difficulties in repaying debts, and more protectionism. In the end all will lose, oil producers and consumers alike.

FROM OUR NOV. 8 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

1910: Chinese Demand a Parliament PEKING - Ten thousand students paraded with bands and lanterns, shouting "banzais" for the Constitution, the Emperor and China [on Nov. 7], in celebration of the decree granting an earlier convening of Parliament than was at first intended. The enthusiasm shown was not, however, reflected in the provincial assembly, the Tzuchengyuan. The formal reception of the Imperial edict precipitated a heated debate. Speeches of provincial members revealed disappointment that Parliament is not to open earlier than 1913. The keynote of the speeches was that the convening of Parliament is essential if China is to escape Corea's fate. Leading members hotly demanded that the Government show how it hopes to protect Manchuria during the ensuing three years.

1935: Spread of African War Feared DJIBOUTI, French Somaliland - The problem confronting France and England in this part of the world is the possible spread of the Italo-Abyssinian conflict. Opinion in British and French Somaliland is that Premier Mussolini's program is so definitely outlined that he is committed to action which may lead to serious incidents. England is making certain she will not be caught by surprise. Protection has been assured from the Sudan to Somaliland and even to Kenya. She has increased 20fold her air force in the Sudan and has added to the number of planes patrolling the Eritrean and Libyan frontiers. Defenses in the Suez and the Mediterranean have been reinforced, while at the southern end of the Red Sea England is also prepared to combat any warlike moves.

Development Works in the Third World

OPENHAGEN - The West is more attentive these days to the twin demons of famine and the debt crisis than to the continuing Third World drama of development. Yet development is the best hope for overcoming those demons.

It is fashionable among skeptics in the West to assert that development aid has been a waste. That charge ignores a striking change that such aid has brought about in the Third World — what Bradford Morse, the American who heads the United Nations Development Program, calls the "release of human energy."

It is not merely that people are living longer and are in better health, nor even that literacy is on the rise. Nor is it only a question of more dams and roads being built. In the 35 years since the West began pumping what now amounts to an estimated $500 billion into development assistance, there has come about a significant change in autitude among Third Worlders.

A new self-reliance is evident to those of us who travel in the Third World. Western aid has created a sharp increase in the capacity of people to absorb technology. And so, while Third World governments may owe a trillion dollars to Western financial institutions, at the grass roots there is greater confidence among people in their own capacity to change their living conditions.

Another significant change is a growing conviction that private enterprise and the market economy are far better tools for economic growth than state socialism. The development experience suggests that virtually every socialist attempt at economic progress in the Third World has failed conspicuously. The ultimate triumph of market-oriented capitalism may be near. During recent travels I have seen confurmed By Pranay Gupte practitioners of state-run socialism -- such as Burma, China and Tanzania - embarking on liberalization of their economies, a startling remodeling based if not on the concept of laissezfaire then at least on a system of incentives.

Why has this development story not received the sort of attention it merits? Why, when the subject is raised, is one likely to hear that development is just a license for Third World types to buy fancy cars and pay themselves fat, tax-free salaries in international agencies?

Scores of officials from development agencies including the World Bank, the UN Development Program and UNICEF - met in Copenhament Program and UNICEF — met in Copenhagen this week to examine such questions. They agreed that part of their problem was that development agencies usually tell their stories only to others in the development community — preaching to the converted. The age of propaganda has ended and the "development story" needs to be told in sharp, human terms, Millions of lives have been affected for the better. It is a believable been affected for the better. It is a believable story that needs to be told believably.

Attending their meetings, an observer was struck by the candor. Participants did not gloss over the perceived failures of "development."
They took into account criticism that the original United Nations development mandate was at worst innocuous and at best mildly benign.

They discussed criticism that the UN develop ment machinery often substitutes international bureaucracy for real projects. A frequent charge has been that funding mechanisms and gover-nance systems sometimes insulate multilateral aid administration, particularly within the Unit-ed Nations family, from effective accountability. All the same, these experts voiced a belief that when you look at the grass roots you find the when you look at the grass roots you find the development process to be working — working in different cadences and at different speeds, to be sure, but in a way that gives cause for hope not only to aid recipients but also to the donors.

The people of the Third World no longer seem to be saying, "Give us more." They are reforming their systems and mining more to themselves for innovative methods to ensure development.

innovative methods to ensure development.

But the Third World does expect continued understanding from the West: less protectionism and a more effective way to tackle the debt crisis, perhaps through debt adjustment so that poor countries will have money for internal development. The Third World is pointing out that the international data origin will be resolved.

international debt crisis will not be resolved unless Third World economies keep growing.

Another message from Copenhagen is that donor countries cannot hope to keep throwing money at emergency situations. Such aid is needed now, but it is no substitute for long-term ed now, but it is no substitute for long-term development. The solution is to help the Third World promote further development so that the root causes of emergencies such as famine — poor food distribution and rampant population growth, for example — are tackled effectively.
Development is the only worthwhile answer for the long term. And it has been shown to work.

A Historic Chance Because Moscow Needs Détente

By Stephen F. Cohen

PRINCETON, New Jersey — If the United States really wants to improve political relations with the Soviet Union and end the nuclear arms race, the Geneva summit will be a historic opportunity. The reason is not that the Soviet Union has suddenly become a benign or like-mind-ed superpower but that, as Mikhail Gorbachev has made clear repeatedly, his foreign policy is an extension of domestic policy: To carry out his program of reform at home, he needs detente and arms control abroad. None of this is acknowledged by the Reagan administration, which seems to have an acute case of cold war myopia about developments inside the Soviet Union. Ever since Mr. Gorbachev became general secretary in March, it has portrayed him as a slicker but traditional Soviet apparatchik, and his policy statements as nothing but "public relations." In reality, everything indicates that areas. They may not alter the situa-

LIVE ACTION

Mr. Gorbachev is the first reformminded Soviet leader since Nikita Khrushchev in the 1950s. Even before taking office, he pointedly identified himself with the reformist wing of the party, calling for "deep transformations" in the state economic system. Since March he has outlined a far-reaching decentralization of industrial management and curtailment of ministerial control, while declaring that "more major, important decisions" are still to come. If recent proposals in Pravda and Izvestia are an indication, those decisions may introduce, among other things, a considerably larger role for private enterprise and market relations.

Such reforms will not bring capi talism or democracy to the Soviet Union, but they will, inescapably, entail liberalizing changes in various

Mr. Gorbachev may be preparing to pick up the Khrushchev banner of official de-Stalinization, as suggested in September by two prominent anti-Stalinist publications by Yevgeny Yevrushenko, a beliwether of that long-suppressed cause.

But these internal possibilities stand no chance without a significant improvement in U.S.-Soviet relations for two fundamental reasons.

First, economic reforms will require major new investments in nondefense sectors, especially consumer-related industries. Given the laggardly rate of Soviet economic growth, such expenditures will be impossible unless military spending can be reduced or at least frozen. That will require an end to the strategic weapons race. It certainly precludes anything as costly as President Rea-his reform program, have aroused resentment among old-line conservatives who have been heard to refer to him derisively as malchik, or "the kid." Such attitudes no doubt motivated Andrei Gromyko's unusual assurance to the Central Committee:

He has brought reform-minded officials into the top leadership, and he recently ousted two opponents of economic change, Prime Minister Nikolai Tikhonov and the longtime Gosplan chief, Nikolai Baibakov. But he must overcome widespread protests, in the party elite and the state bureaucracy, that even modest decentralization and liberalization are too dangerous because of a "growing American threat." Better relations with Western Europe, Japan and China, which the Gorbachev leadership is also promising, cannot solve this central problem. In official Soviet eyes, America

The Dupe Might Be Yurchenko *

By Allan E. Goodman

WASHINGTON — Vitaly Yur-chenko is lying. The Soviet inreligence agent says be was "forcibly abducted" last August in Rome by the CIA brought "unconscious" to the United States, "forced to take some drugs" during his debriefing and then, "due to a momentary lapse of attention" of his case officers, given a chance on Saturday to "break out to freedom and come to the Soviet Embassy" in Washington.

Those claims have absolutely no & basis in fact. U.S. intelligence services rarely encourage defections, and never do so by the use of force and drugs. The CLA would much rather persuade the potential defector to remain in place; once someone defects, his or her connection to information dries up. While Soviet defectors often disclose much-needed details about past KGB methods and operations, the days of scoops on current information are over.

Once in the United States, defectors are handled with kid gloves. Drugs, especially, are anathema, To use drugs would deprive the United States of the all-important high ground in espionage, discourage others from working for America and call into question any information derived from a defector's debriefing.

To succeed, debriefers need to es-tablish a relationship of trust so as to draw out the most detailed picture possible of the intelligence group with which the defector worked.

All this cannot be pleasant for the defector, who knows that he or she is an object of contempt not only in the country betrayed but in the new one as well. The strain of escape, the permanent severing of family and cultural bonds and the endless hours of debriefing take their toll; None of that was evident on Mr. Yurchenko's face in front of the cameras at his press conference in the Soviet Embassy. He was poised. His indignant rhetoric about American "kidnappers" was, I suspect, meant to play well in Europe and the Third World on the eve of the U.S.-Soviet summit, at which Soviet human rights violations are to be discussed.

In short, I think that he was a plant, and that his debriefers probably saspected him of being one. He would have done better to look a little more bewildered, hung over, mistreated, to make his case convincing.

What happened is probably this: Mr. Yurchenko, a semor KGB officer, believed that he had convinced U.S. intelligence operatives in Rome that he wished to defect. They played along, reserving judgment until he voluntarily entered U.S. territory.

There may have been some early process if Mr. Yurchenko implicated U.S. personnel who appeared to have been working for Soviet intelligence. But the subsequent hours of debriefing must have convinced U.S. experts that he was not genuine.

How he got away from U.S. intelli-gence officers and to the Soviet Embassy is anybody's gness, but I think officials were suspicious enough to tempt him into running. And he did.

The KGB will not be pleased with Mr. Yurchenko's performance. He could not have learned much in a month to add to what the Soviet intelligence service already knows about the CIA and how it handles defectors. He probably did scare So-viet agents in the United States whose cover might have been shaky. He certainly scared Soviet agents who know the KGB's willingness to expose low-level operatives in order to establish a plant as bona fide.

Mr. Yurchenko will probably return to Moscow to a much-publicized hero's welcome - and ostracism by his colleagues, then early retirement. I would not be a bit surprised to learn some months from now that an allegedly despondent Vitaly Yurchenko is in a Soviet mental institution and will never be heard from again.

Along with a chance to meet Russian people. American visitors to the Soviet Union get an opportunity to see America from fresh perspectives. For example, I found the view of President Reagan from the streets and on the television screens of Moscow as enlightening as our delega-tion's visit to the Kremlin or our conference with a panel that included a Soviet general. As a member of a traveling group that included two U.S. congressmen, a journalist and arms control negotiators, I return from Russia with an impression of Ronald Reagan as a leader who says nyet and little else when it comes to dialogue with his Soviet counterparts.

Perhaps he underestimates the ef-fect of his definition of the Soviet Union as an "evil empire." Russian commentators repeat the phrase so often that it has become part of the popular language. A national culture known for its anxiety is unlikely to toss off this sort of evidence. I heard the phrase repeated everywhere. It is offered as evidence that America does not want and will not encourage detente or significant arms reduction.

This image of my country concerns me for several reasons, but primarily because it is not accurate.

The United States is historically the world leader in the science of conflict resolution. A review of labormanagement policies and practices would indicate that Americans are masters at nonviolent negotiation. Universities offer courses in negotiating skills; patterns for conflict resolution are created in these and other and it is a crisis that can be resolved institutions and have become an impressive made-in-U.S.A. product. This is one export we need never limit. To judge from his past performances, however, President Reagan has moved creative negotiation to the top of the list of products prohibited for export to the Soviet Union. His timing seems off. Mikhail Gorbachev is the first Soviet leader since the revolution who can be called an educated man in the classic sense. His two university degrees, his worldliness and his comprehension of the ways world opinion is formed set him apart from his predecessors. Not only can he be expected to avoid any indication that he refuses to communicate, he can be counted on to take the initiative, to make offers that will have many Americans wondering why Mr. Reagan refuses out of hand framer of such first steps, but today it has lost the initiative. There is still time to regain it. There is time to end the name-calling and replace the stone wall of rhetoric with a tapestry of proposals for creative disarmament. In so doing, the United States will be acting in its best tradition one which has given America a global image that is now in need of some redemption. The world has historically looked to America as the most effective sponsor of systems for con-flict resolution. If Mr. Gorbachev continues to make all the proposals and President Reagan continues to bang his shoe, the world will begin

Foie Gras Frais de Canard to Go? The Lofty Tour d'Argent Establishes A Grocery Outpost at Street Level

ARIS — He wears a blue cornflower in his lapel ("I would feel naked without it") as if it were a touch of imperial purple, and why not? Claude Terrail can trace the history of the Tour d'Argent, his three-star restaurant, back four centuries, and his maternal grandfather was the proprietor of the Cafe Anglais a famous 10th control restaurant mentioned by Proust Café Anglais, a famous 19th-century restaurant mentioned by Proust and domain of the great and unapproachable chef Adolphe Dugléré of the sole of that name.

Terrail's eye is vigilant, his waistline slim despite 40 years in his tower, his dress impeccable; his charm is both as crisp and as unchous as his famous canard presse and his flourishes as expansive as a Château Lafite '45.

Why on earth would such a man want to become a grocer? For the truth is that right across the street from the Tour d'Argent, at 2 Rue Cardinal-Lemoine, there is now a shop called Les Comptoirs de la Tour d'Argent that sells edibles under the Tour d'Argent

His own necktie is elegantly tachiste. "It's four years old, I could hardly expect people to buy something that old, could I?" Sometimes fondard wouldn't melt in his mouth.

He has gone into groceries, he explains, for a sole reason: to protect the Tour's customers. The shop across the street became vacant and, fearing that a low-class restaurant might open whose customers would offend his own with uncouth words and gestures. he promptly decided to take over the premises. Now not only can his guests descend from his fastness without fear of running an unsightly and unmannerly gantlet, but they can also, as Mr. Terrail puts it. "leave Paris with a foie gras frais de canard tucked under their arm to eat in Hong Kong or New York or Timbuktu."

The duck and goose livers at the Comptoirs are prepared under the supervision of the Tour's chef, Dominique Bouchet, and are the only

Sounds of Exotic Cultures Enter Musical Mainstream

by John Rockwell

EW YORK - Ever since Western explorers ventured out beyoud the known limits of civilization, those back home have been fascinated by exotic cultures. In the late 19th century, at the height of colonialism, this fascination had begun to express itself overtly in Western art, so much so that the Muse-um of Modern Art here could mount a whole show last season documenting the influence of "primitive" art on the modernists. This influence has continued unabated (except for the disruptions of war) to the present day, and forms the bedrock for any attempt to explain the recent sharp increase in popularity of non-Western music in New York and the West in general.

In the colonial past, Westerners may have been titillated by the exotic, but they also looked down upon the arts of other cultures as lower on the evolutionary scale - or less imbued with divine grace - than their own. Today, shaken in our world-conquering selfconfidence, we are more willing — eager, even — to seek out the exotic for enlighten-

More and more Westerners, especially among the young, seem to be yearning for alternatives to the drab normality of too much mainstream art. Non-Western arts in general, and music in particular, provide such alternatives - music that is overthy religious, tied to man's mystical aspirations and kinetic energies in a more direct yet mysterious way than our own music.

I sense a bit of boredom in the music business in the West, both classical and popular," says Robert Browning, whose non-Western concerts at the tiny downtown Alternative Museum over the last decade laid the groundwork for his newly founded World Music Institute, designed to present such music on a broader scale. Browning adds that a healthy portion of his Alternative Museum audiences consisted of composers and musicians, mostly from the experimental, jazz and popular areas.

"People want something new and different, something they aren't finding in Western art forms," suggests Peter Grilli, director of the performing arts program at the Japan

No city in the world can offer a wider variety of such exotic musical alternatives than New York. This week alone, Soh Daiko, a troupe specializing in Japanese drumming, will be at the Japan Society on Friday and Saturday nights. And on Saturday, Carnegie Hall will be the site of another of the many Festival of India presentations this season, this one an ambitious concert sponsored by Browning's World Music Institute. The program will feature Nikhil Banerjee, one of the masters of the sitar (the same ornately decorated, guitar-like instrument played by Ravi Shankar), as well as the niyars, fo from the remote Thar Desert region of the northwestern Indian state of Rajasthan.

But these are the mere iceberg-tips that happen to be surfacing this week. New Yorkers are being positively deluged these days with concerts representing the high-art traditions of India, the Middle East, Indonesia, Japan and even, belatedly, China; with folk and popular music from Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, and now, slowly, with noncommercial folk traditions from the entire planet. Sometimes, these musicians accompany dance or theater troupes. But more and more often, they appear here on their

The big troupes and the smaller musical groups appear not just in major midtown spaces. They also frequent the new downtown Triplex Theater, where the World Music Institute is offering the bulk of its concerts. And now there are several glamorous spaces consecrated to non-Western performers, chief among them the Asia Society, whose fancy new building on Park Avenue at 70th Street, completed in 1981, includes a lovely 258-seat basement theater, and the Japan Society, whose handsome building near the United Nations contains a 279-seat Nikhil Banerjee, a master of the sitar.

theater that is being used more and more for performances of traditional Japanese arts - like the Soh Daiko troupe. The present popularity of non-Western concerts was preceded by what seems now to have been an anticipatory burst of interest in in the late 1960s, sparked by the Beatles' involvement with all things Indian. Shankar suddenly found himself a star of the counterculture, to his considerable bemusement.

While that mass popularity faded by the early '70s, it seems in retrospect to have helped provide the foundation for today's more sophisticated audience. Partly that is because a generation that had its interest piqued in the late '60s studied the music seriously and is now coming into positions of influence within the presenting organiza-tions and in the media.

A growing number of Westerners have attended ethnomusicology courses — both the academic study of non-Western music and, more strikingly, its actual performance. Ethnomusicologists were also primarily re-sponsible for the easy availability of non-Western music on recordings, especially the popular Nonesuch Explorer series. Ethnomusicology students have come to the fore in such academic bodies as the American Institute of Indian Studies, which organized the American tour of the folk musicians at Carnegie Hall Saturday. Or they have founded or taken over actual performing or present-

NE example is Browning, the Englishman widely credited as the cata-lytic force behind the current popularity of non-Western concerts here. Another is Ralph Samuelson, an American expert on the shakuhachi, the Japanese flute. Samuelson is also associate director of the Asian Cultural Council, which funds artists' exchanges, and president of the Society for Asian Music, which offers a Sunday afternoon concert series at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

One other explanation for New York's growing centricity in world music lies in its growing world centricity. Other Western capitals - London or Paris, for example remain centers primarily for the kinds of non-Western music played in lands they once colonized. Thus Indian music flourishes in London and African music in Paris, partly because there are large ethnic communities there who want to hear the music of "the old country."

New York's ethnic communities span a wider range, probably, than those of any other Western city. There are Launs of every description here. Africans, Chinese, Japanese, Koreans, Iranians, Indians, Southeast Asians, enough people from the Caribbean to sustain huge annual festivals. And New York's approximation of a microcosm of the world's ethic variety has been made more exact in the past decade, with an enormous influx of Asian and Latin peoples. Some of these immigrants were well-to-do in their homelands; others have risen on the economic scale once they got here. Browning estimates that at least half the audiences at his recent weekend of Triplex Theater concerts of Indian music came from the New York Indian community. Soh Daiko, the Japanese drummers, consist of members of the New York Japanese-American community. "There are second- and third-generation Americans who are trying to rediscover the cultural roots their parents turned their backs on," says Grilli.

It is not just a rise in the number of New. York outlets for foreign musicians that explains the recent increase in such concerts here. There is now a growing nationwide network of independent promoters (many within black or ethnic communities), universities and museums that can make extensive tours possible. And no one has done more to organize that network than Beate Gordon, the longtime director of the performing arts department at the Asia Society (that society at the outset as well as the Asian Cultural Council were funded by the late John D. Rockefeller 3d, whose role in the fostering of non-Western music here deserves special mention on its own). Gordon makes at least one extensive trip abroad each year to scout out new performers for the society and the country at large.

Such tours are facilitated by a new willingness by foreign governments and corporations to underwrite them. Japan, which Grilli says has grown increasingly sensitive to the need for international public relations, has the semi-governmental Japan Foundation for such purposes, and the similarly organized Indian Council for Cultural Relations in New Delhi has helped fund many of the Festival of India tours. National airlines will sometimes help with transportation. And in America, the Japan Society has actively solicited corporate support for major tours -

Authors Become Public Figures as Dutch Fiction Booms

by Marlise Simons

MSTERDAM - If a nation's reading habits are in any way a measure of its frame of mind, then the Netherlands is in a state of ebullience.
Reports that Europe is slumped in cultural fatigue appear not to have reached here. Poets, playwrights and essayists have always had an audience in the Netherlands, but of late people have responded strongly to fiction writers in search of a new social cohesion. Not since the Eightiers, the Dutch modernist literary movement of the 1880s, have the novel and novelists carried such authority.

Dutch authors have become public figures and are called on to produce columns, speeches and interviews on a broad range of subjects, as though they were society's newly appointed arbiters. In the last few years, fiction (excluding crime novels, science fiction and romances) has jumped from 10 to 17 percent of total book sales. "More than before, people are buying Dutch writers, both the established names and the new people who are not writing from an ivory tower," said Laurens van Krevelen, the director of Meulenhoff, a leading literary publisher.

Some skeptics argue that all this activity is a superficial trend created by the media and its culturati. Writers and their private lives, this argument goes, are merely the latest distraction in a country with increasingly short working hours and high unemployment. Readers, it is said, are more likely to thumb through the new book supplement to keep up with belletristic chatter than actually to read and finish the books.

But the buyers of fiction are mainly people between 18 and 30 years old, a new generation of readers for whom books appear to play an important role. "We have slowly dismantled our common ideals and beliefs," the novelist Kester Frenk said in one of the Amsterdam cafes that serve as literary salons. Now we're seeing novels again that try to look for a philosophy, a vision, that do more than hold up a mirror of society. The views of Frenk, who will be lecturing this year on Dutch literature at the University of Minnesota, are shared by others who think artists have gained in authority power, religion, the university, we've made everything more complex," Hans Maarten van den Brink, a respected literary critic, said. "People are searching again for coher-ence, but not from experts who make things more complicated. They are turning to the arts. Museum visits have increased enormously. And people are looking to writers for a synthesizing voice."

The young men and women writing fiction here are not exactly providing answers. But their work, varying widely in style and theme, has a new optimistic tone, a daring shift in a nation where optimism has long been seen as naïveté or opportunism. "The difference today is that it is slowly becoming acceptable again to write about ethics, values, to touch on religious ideas, to be lyrical about nature," Van den Brink said. Oek de Jong, 32 years old, whose two novels, "Blowing Summer Dresses" and "Circle in the Grass," have had runaway sales, describes himself as a mystic. Ari van der Heijden, 32, has been chronicling the '60s and '70s, when educated youth turned to drug use, street violence and urban squatting as a way of life. He has called his trilogy in progress "A Toothless Time," a study of a generation stuck in adolescence but searching for its own values.

ARRY MULISCH, one of the Netherlands' most revered authors, is himself a man of irreverence.

The writer has become a kind of pop star, he's visible, he appears on TV," he said pouring black coffee in his studio, which is unusually spacious and tidy for Amsterdam's normally overstuffed canal houses. "Young people nowadays have more money, and they must have the new books; it's the done thing. Of course, as a writer, I think that's great. Snobbism has always been a driving force for the arts. The Renaissance monarchs attracted writers and painters and musicians and let them work. Snobbism is good for art."

His first novel sold 6,000 copies in six years and was, he recalls, "no worse that what I did afterward." His latest book, "The Assault," has already sold a near-record 250,000 copies in the Netherlands, "The Assault," tells of ble of war, it is being widely translated and appeared in the United States this year.

Publishers here say there is an awakening interest abroad in Dutch writing. Translations are being made into Swedish, German and French, and there are English-

> Brandt retorted that the "minister against culture" had "declared war on literature." A noisy and lengthy national debate ensued - involving the cabinet, the prime minister, writers, artists' guilds and the press - on whether literary merit is separate from morality and therefore not in the government's domain. One effect of the ruckus has been the suggestion by some cultural critics that literary awards are better left to private rather than public institutions. The P.C. Hooft Prize jury has resigned, and while Dutch literature flourishes, it is uncertain whether the much-coveted prize will be awarded the next year.

Relaxed Exploration in New Orleans

by Frances Frank Marcus

EW ORLEANS - New Orleanians are deriving great satisfac-tion from the fact that the rest of the world has discovered blackened redfish. They have always known that their food was the best, along with their jazz and their Victorian architecture. Now news about Cajun cooking and its attempted cloning from Manhattan to Singapore has given the city an added lift.

Southern Louisiana has a tradition of good cooks, trained by the French who arrived in the 18th century. A surge of new restaurants combined with a slow economy has kept them striving to please. Fall and winter weather, which ranges from Indian summer to cool with an occasional cold snap, encourages the appetite. In addition, November brings camellias: December, poinsettias; Jan. I. the Sugar Bowl, followed by the Super Bowl on Jan. 26. Two weeks later there is Mardi Gras. Feb. 11, a day that most people take as a holiday.

Few cities offer more relaxed exploring. The narrow streets of the French Quarter. the Vieux Carré, are ideal for walking, with refreshments at hand and eclectic possibilities for Christmas shopping. Royal Street is beside the Mississippi in the French Quarter or a riverboat like the Natchez, a sternwheel steamboat which offers two-hour cruises. from 11:30 A.M. to 2:30 P.M. The fare is $9.50, $4.75 for children.

A 60-cent ride on the St. Charles streetcar. the city's only remaining line, is also a must. Board a car on Carondolet Street just off Canal Street and try for a seat on a mahogany bench trimmed with brass. The route skirts the Garden District, a neighborhood of 19th-century mansions. To visit the zoo (9:30 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. weekdays, to 5 P.M. weekends), get off at Audubon Park. Entry fee: $4.50, $2 for children.

Jean Lafitte National Historical Park rangers lead four different free walking tours in and around the French Quarter. Some tours go to the historic St. Louis Cemetery No. 1 and the Garden District. Walks begin in the French Market at Decatur and Dumaine Streets. For details, call 504-589-2636,

The Delta Queen, a paddlewheeler decorated in gold leaf and Tiffany glass, and its younger sister, the Mississippi Queen, begin fall cruises on the lower Mississippi in early November. From their new terminal, the boats will paddle upriver, visiting various plantations. Cruising to Vicksburg and back good for antique hunting: Jackson Square from Dec. 20 to 27, the Mississippi Queen will celebrate a Cajun Christmas complete with cooking lessons. Other cruises range from two to seven nights, and the cost of a cabin for two runs from about $375 to $700 a night. Further details: 504-586-0631 or 800-543-1949.

Fall brings country festivals. The Destrehan Plantation House Festival will be held Nov. 9 and 10 on the Mississippi 20 miles upstream. Tables laden with regional food, arts and crafts will occupy the lawn beside the 1787 house built in West Indies and Greek Revival style. Entry fee: $2.

The French Quarter's annual caroling will take place by candlelight in Jackson Square from 7 to 8 Dec. 22

Christmas country-style is celebrated at Madewood, a plantation house on Bayou Lafourche 72 miles from New Orleans from 5:30 to 8:30 P.M. on Dec. 14. There will be carolers on the balcony and turkey dinner for 200. Tickets are $40. There are hotels in Thibodaux, a half-hour's drive away, for those who want to stay overnight. Accommodations at Madewood have been booked for months, but if you're interested in makreservations for next year, write to 420 Julia Street, New Orleans, 70130 or call 504-524-1988.

One of the best small museums in the country, the 1857 Gallier House in the French Quarter, which contains authentic furnishings and offers changing exhibits on dining habits, plumbing, lineas and other apsects of the 19th century, will be decked out for Christmas beginning Dec.7. Open from 10 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. Monday to Saturday (last tour: 3:45; $3).

USIC is thriving in New Orleans. Young bands, modern jazz groups and Dixieland are heard in hotel lobbies, shopping malls, restaurants and music clubs and on the street. On Saturday nights about 60 clubs offer live jazz, rhythm and blues or Cajun music. On week nights live music can be found at 30 or so clubs.

Preservation Hall (726 St. Peter Street: 504-522-2238 or 504-523-8939) is still the first stop for traditional jazz from 8:30 to 12:30 nightly, Thanksgiving and Christmas included but not Mardi Gras. Admission: $2. Food and beverages are not sold, but spectators may bring drinks.

The Raspberry Ragitmers, Creole Rice, the Lonisiana Repertory Jazz Ensemble and other jazz bands play from 9 to midnight Tuesday to Saturday in Le Jazz Meridien in the Hotel Meridien (614 Canal Street; 504-525-6500). Drinks start at $3.25.

Sundays from 1 to 3 P.M. jazz players offer free concerts in the performance tent in the French Market's Dutch Alley. The French Market information booth at Decatur and St. Ann Streets has program details. Bird lovers are in luck this year. The Spanish Colonial-style Presbytère, a state museum on Jackson Square, will open a John James Audubon show on Dec. 6. Organized by the American Museum of Natural History, it will run to Feb.2. Hours: 10 A.M. to 6 P.M. Tuesday to Sunday. Entry fee: $2.

From Nov. 10 to Jan.12 the New Orleans Museum of Art in City Park will display works by David, Ingres, Degas, Renoir and Picasso among others, all collected by the local philanthropist Muriel Bultman Francis. From Dec. 8 to Jan. 26 the museum will focus on painters admired by French kings from the time of Louis XIV to the French Revolution. Open from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. Tuesday to Sunday; entry fee: $3.

Thanks to overly optimistic hotel builders. New Orleans is now prime ground for bar-gain hunting, especially for those who would like a room in a small French Quarter hotel.

One of the best is Grenoble House (329 Dauphin Street; 504-522-1331), an all-suite hotel occupying three Victorian town houses. The 17 suites have kitchens and china. Sherry on arrival and Continental breakfasts included in the rate. One-bedroom suites start at $110, reduced to $85 from Dec. 1 to 26. Arnaud's, a first-rate restaurant around the corner, delivers meals to guests who want to dine in.

Closer to the river is Le Richelieu (1234 Chartres Street; 504-529-2492; 800-535-9653), a small. quiet motel occupying a 19thcentury mansion and a former macaroni factory. A small cafe overlooks the patio and pool. Rates for two start at $70, including parking, somewhat less during slow seasons. The Royal Orleans (621 St. Louis Street; 504-529-5333) is near fine French Quarter restaurants and has its own deluxe restaurants. Ask for an outside room. Current rates for two range from $150 to $170 a night: next year they will range from $158 to $180.

There are newer hotels than the Pontchar-train (2031 St. Charles Avenue; 504-524-0581), a step away from the Garden District, but none with a more loval following. Rooms are spacious, the service friendly. Rates for two begin at $105, suites at $205.

TAMING good restaurants is like naming them in Paris. The list quickly gets out of hand. Expandable waistbands are useful.

Local food critics give high marks to Hen-ri. (614 Canal Street; 504-527-6708), the Hotel Meridien's handsome new restaurant. The cuisine is Alsatian: the decor. white orchids and green marble. The menu du soir is $39.50 with choices changing daily. One lineup: small quiche appetizer, foie gras with truffles, Scotch salmon souffle, sherbet, rabbit stuffed with watercress mousse and fresh pear in puff pastry with ice cream and champagne sauce, coffee and pents fours. Commander's Palace (1403 Washington Avenue; 504-899-8221) in the Garden District prepares local seafood and other Louisiana specialties with a light and appealing touch. Reservations are imperative. For shrimp remonlade, house salad, trout with roasted pecans, and chocolate ludge cake and coffee the price is $24 a person.

K-Paul's Louisiana Kitchen (416 Chartres Street: 504-524-7394) is Paul Prudhomme's homely temple of blackened redfish, the place for spicy Cajun fare, served flippantly. When available, the black redfish is $26. Other main dishes start at $22. Open for dinner only. Monday to Friday. Be prepared to wait up to two bours.

Galatoire's (209 Bourbon Street: 504-525-2021) is a New Orleans landmark that insists on coats and ties after 5 P.M. and all day Sunday, but the French-Creoke food is well worth the effort. Eggplant stuffed with shrump and crabmeau, a meal in itself for $10, is highly recommended. No reservations accepted.

Mexico Acts to Reassure Tourists

by Morris D. Rosenberg

N the wake of the tragic earthquake that struck Mexico City Sept. 19, the Mexican government has begun an urgent campaign to reassure tourists about their safety and protect its vital high eason winter travel business.

Officials in Mexico emphasize that the extensive destruction was confined to a relatively small, older section of the city primarily Colonia Roma, but also affecting parts of downtown and the Zona Rosa, a major tourist area. Power, water, sewage, transportation and local phone systems in the capital are now operating, all 53 airports around the country are handling traffic, and all highways are open. The initial quake and aftershock left major tropical resorts like Acapulco and Cancin unharmed.

More than 8,000 bodies have been recovered from the wreckage in Mexico City and thousands of Mexicans are still missing. More than 400 buildings collapsed, about 300 are believed ready to fall and some already have been torn down. Damages are estimated at $4 billion.

Travel agents have been concerned that the tragedy in the capital might cause many Americans and other tourists to bypass — at least for a time — that center of culture, business and government. The city is the main destination for tourists, who generally combine it with one of the beach resorts as part of a package.

The capital is a major airline gateway - though not the only one - to the popular recreational, historical and archaeological sites scattered throughout the country that last year drew nearly five million visitors. Almost a million stopped in Mexico City at least for a few days.

For Mexico, already suffering from serions inflation, high unemployment and a con-tinuing flight of capital to the United States, the $2.2 billion tourism industry is second only to oil as a producer of much-needed hard currency. A sharp drop in arrivals from the United States, which supplies 85 percent of the visitors, would be another blow to its shaky economy even as the country begins the long process of restoration.

With these sobering facts in mind, Tourism Minister Antonio Enriquez Savignac flew to New York recently with a message for travel industry leaders: "Many of the television reports . . . tend to give the impression that the capital was completely devastated. That impression is incorrect."

And as Mexico launched its advertising and public relations offensive, a group of U.S. tour operators returned from a oneweek inspection trip to the capital and three resort cities.

"This is a slower fall season than normal but people are still traveling to Mexico," said Anna Di Leo of Alexander Charters and Tours, a New York wholesaler-retailer spealizing in packages to Mexico.

Mexico was not enjoying a super season before the earthquake, although business was increasing. That was because its hotel rates and airline fares -despite some earlier benefits from devaluation - could not compete effectively with European prices due to the strong dollar abroad, one tour operator

Full restoration of international phone service and normalization of communications with the rest of Mexico were expected momentarily. Earlier, to enable members of the travel industry to communicate with hotels, tour operators and airlines in Mexico, the government set up an air courier service from New York.

ERE is a summary of current conditions affecting visitors to Mexico City, according to a government-

HOTELS: Of the capital's 507 hotels with a total of 35,350 rooms, 153 hotels with 19,167 rooms were in the areas hit by the tremors. Six hotels with 883 rooms were totally destroyed, and seven with 848 rooms were partially destroyed and probably will not be restored. Twenty-two hotels suffered major damage, 25 have minor damage, 51 have decorative damage such as fallen plaster, and 42 hotels remain in perfect condi-

While 9 percent - 1,736 - of all hotel rooms in the capital have been permanently wiped out, the majority of the country's 250,000 hotel rooms were unaffected. Mexico City hotels destroyed were: the Regis, Principado, Finisterra, Romano Downtown.

Versailles and Central: the Continental, De Carlo, Residencia and Montreal were among those "semi-destroyed."

HEALTH: The Pan American Health Organization said last week there is no danger of epidemics in the capital, and tomists do not need any vaccinations to visit any area of Mexico. The Mexican Ministry of Health has recommended that, as a precaution visitors to the capital avoid drinking any water that has not been boiled or bottled standard rule over the years for many sourists, especially in the tropics. The government also suggests that visitors awaid food and drinks sold on the capital's streets.

TOURIST ATTRACTIONS: The majority of Mexico City's attractions - such as the Metropolitan Cathedral, National Palace, Palace of Fine Arts and the National University — are reported to be in perfect condition, but in some cases tour operators have had to modify routes because some areas are cordoned off. The famous National Museum of Anthropology in Chapulteper Park also escaped unscathed.

Among places damaged but restorable are the well-known typical sourist zones: La Lagunilla, La Merced, Tepito, Piaza Ganbaldi and Zona Rosa. The only archaeologi cal zone affected was the Ehecatl Temple in the Pino Suarez subway station. All nonhotel bars and nightclubs were untouched. Of 354 restaurants belonging to the Mexican Res-taurant Association, only 12 incurred damages that forced them to close.

OTHER TOURIST AREAS: Ixtapa-Zihuatanejo on the Pacific Coast was the only major resort area to suffer damages from the tremors of Sept. 19 and 20. They were mainly superficial and affected only the buildings masonry and external surfaces, according to the town officials. Three of the 28 hotels in the area remain closed. Club Med-Ixtapa was undamaged but will be closed until Nov. 15 to permit a thorough inspection. Three other Club Med Mexican resort villages - at Playa Blanca, Guaymas and Cancim - were intouched and remain open. Also undamaged and open are the Club's five archaeological villages —three in the Yucatan and two outside Mexico City at

HE varying degree of governmental and corporate assistance also helps explain some imbalances that still exist in the range of non-Western music of-fered abroad. Korean and Burmese music gets shorter shrift here, says Gordon, because those governments have less foreign hard currency with which to support their touring artists.

The long-time isolation of mainland China and the internal repression there of tradi-tional culture discouraged the spread of traditional Chinese music to Western audiences. There was also, Browning suggests, a lingering association in Western minds with simplistic pentatonic music of the sort used in Hollywood films. And, thinks Gordon, Westerners believed all Chinese music sounded as abrasive and percussive as that which accompanies Peking Op-era, which was originally intended for outdoor performance. But now, such stric-tures are loosening, with a tour of traditional musicians from Peking scheduled for Febru-ary. And the New York Chinese community.

is beginning to muster fairly sophisticated performances of traditional music. Another disparity exists between classical, high-art musical traditions, folk music and commercial popular music. New York gets ample high-art musicians, and an increasing number of popular troupes, like the Senegalese band Toure Kunda. But the more ancient folk forms, uncontaminated by Western influence, have been harder to bring

Now, however, more and more governments and private impresarios like Gordon are seeking out the folk musicians, too. But the bulk of the foreign imports, apart from the popular bands, are likely to remain from the high-art tradition for the forestable future, which has as much to do with questions of governmental prestige as with strictly aesthetic quality. Flying the Friendly Skies Of Creative Travel Agents

EW YORK - If you asked Pan American World Airways to sell you an unrestricted economy-class ticket from New York to Hong Kong and back, you would recently have been quoted a price of $2,246. But a creative travel agent can arrange, for about $800 more, flights not just to Hong Kong and back but around the world with unlimited stopovers — all in first class.

help international air travelers benefit great-ly from today's highly competitive marketplace. Airlines hesitate to tread in such areas themselves because itineraries can be com-plicated to arrange and may lessen their revenues. They are perfectly legal, however, under agreements between governments and the rules of the 100-odd member airlines of the International Air Transport Association (IATA). The airlines usually welcome whatever business travel agents bring them. You need more, however, than an agent who simply consults a computer. You need one familiar with the IATA fare structure, knows how it can be used to best advantage and is up-to-date on currency fluctuations and their impact on the price of flying.

If you simply want to go to one point in Europe or Asia and back at the lowest possi-ble round-trip fare and can make your plans far in advance, your best option is clear: Pay be lowest available promotional fare. But if you must travel on short notice, have a complicated itinerary with lots of stopovers, want the freedom to change your plans en route without penalty or, above all, want to bask in the huxury of first class at bargain prices, read on.

Helping clients do just that is a specialty of Mark H. Stratton, president of Stratton Travel Inc. of Franklin Lakes, New Jersey. Many of his clients fly internationally on business and demand both maximum flexibility and minimum price.

Last year a representative of Singapore
Airlines recommended Stratton to me as a travel agent who knows a lot about fares. A few months ago I asked him by telephone to construct an itinerary that my wife and I could use to travel around the world —a trip that we hoped to take but later had to cancel.

We originally intended to fly economy class and follow one of the many round-theworld itineraries that use two connecting airlines. At this writing, the price for that method was $2,099 a person, and the tickets are substantially restricted regarding stop-overs and routing.

But Stratton showed how, for $2,638 each, se could send us around the world in first class with unlimited stopovers, using many airlines, and be able to make changes en route with no penalties. Such a ticket would cost at least $5,000 if bought from an airline in New York. One reason for the difference was that Stratton planned to charge us the dollar equivalent of what the tickets would have cost at the time in Irish pounds. If his calculations had been made this fall, the cost would have been higher, because the Irish pound, like most European currencies, had strengthened against the dollar. But it still would have been a substantial bargain.

In capsule, here is how all this is possible:

In 1972, the airlines in the IATA cartel attempted to bring order to a chaotic international pricing situation by establishing what are called fare construction units, or FCU's. Each FCU was made equal to $1, and the fares in foreign countries were based on the values of their respective currencies at that time in relation to the dollar. Thus, one FCU represented 0.38377 of a Adritish or Irish pound, 5.11 French francs, 3.25 West German marks and 581.5 Italian lire. So, if you applied the longstanding air-line rule that that a fare had to be based on the currency of the country where the trip started, it made no difference in cost whether, for example, a trip between New York and London began in either city: If the price was $1,000 from New York, it was £383 from London, the amounts being equivalent.

That was in 1972. As currencies fluctuated, the system was thrown off balance. So IATA members would meet and impose surcharges to bridge gaps. If the dollar doubled in value in relationship to the French franc, for example, the French could not be asked to pay double for their international air tickets; they could not afford to.

Over the years, more than stopgap adjust-ments were clearly needed. So IATA members instituted what they called a currency adjustment factor, or a percentage surcharge based on the highest one-way direct fare between the point of origin and any point on the way. That was to be applicable to an entire journey beyond those countries, even if it was around the world and then some.

In planning our trip, Stratton searched for a country where the dollar was strong and where he could apply a highly favorable

A tale of how economy and luxury can mix

currency adjustment factor. He had to follow the rule of basing our air fare on the currency of the country where the trip theo-retically started, but he did not have to charge us for it in that currency and we did not, in fact, have to leave from there. So he selected Ireland as the origin and Hong Kong as the direct destination with the highest one-way fare, even though we would not actually be flying that route. A currency adjustment factor of 34.2 could thus be applied to our entire journey. The Irish pound was worth $1.05 at the time.

To begin his calculations, Stratton used the round-trip first-class fare between New York and Hong Kong of $4,326, or 4,326 FCU's, which is what I would have had to pay Pan Am if I had bought from the airline directly for such a ticket via the Pacific. Stratton originated each ticket in Shannon, however, which meant that he had to increase the price of each ticket by 552 FCU's — the Shannon-New York economy-class fare — even though we would not actually travel that leg. This brought the total fare to 4.878 FCU's a person. Then, using the IATA exchange rate of 0.38377 Irish pounds to the dollar, he converted the FCU's to 1,872. He then multiplied this by the currency adjustment factor of 34.2, or 134.2 percent, which raised the fare to £2,512. Then, using the rate of $1.05 to the pound, he determined that the fare was $2,638 for each ticket.

Under airline rules, there was no need for us to stop in Ireland at all. In fact, it was suggested that we complete our journey by flying from London to New York on the British Airways Concorde. As our fare was constructed, it would have cost us only $262

To find an inventive agent who can save you money, look for one who deals heavily in international business travel but has time for vacationers as well. An airline probably will not recommend anyone, but it may give you

Be aware, however, that creativity has its limits. Starting or ending tickets where you will not actually travel is common these days if exchange rates or fares work in your favor, provided the routing seems reasonable. But if an agent proposes, for example, that you pay for a 100-mile flight between two remote cities in Africa, then theoretically take a boat across the Atlantic to be eligible for a cheap Concorde fare between New York and Paris, Air France may well not honor your ticket.

TRAVEL

The Chaco: Really Off the Beaten Track

by Edwin McDowell

ILADELFIA, Paraguay - In theory, at least, no destination is more sought after by travelers than Off the Boaten Track, that elusive Eden unspoiled by civilization. While the prospects of finding such places on our crowded planet shrink almost daily, some relatively unspoiled places still exist and the name of one of them is Filadelfia.

This Filadelfia is a settlement in Paraguay founded early in this century by Mennonites, members of a 16th-century Protestant sect that fled Europe for the New World in search of religious freedom as well as exemption from conscription for military service. Today, Paraguay, a tiny landlocked pasto-ral nation hemmed in by Argentina, Brazil and Bolivia, is largely ignored by travelers to Rio, Buenos Aires or La Paz. And of the few tourists who do manage to find their way to Asunción, the sleepy capital, few ever find their way out to Filadelfia. That is because the village is accessible only after a bone-jarring 10-hour bus ride 250 miles northwest into the Chaco Boreal, a California-sized wilderness that fans out from just beyond Asunción westward to the Bolivian border, almost 500 miles away. And even after having arrived in Filadelfia, some visitors may find the wilderness too close to nature for comfort.

A few weeks before I arrived, for example, jaguar attacked a hunter on a ranch 50 miles west of the village. Such incidents are rare but they underscore that the Chaco -a word apparently derived from the Quechua for hunting ground — has not been despoiled by tourists or civilization.

The reasons are geological as well as geo-graphical, for the Chaco is a mixture of desert, jungle, swamp and forest. While it makes up more than 60 percent of Paraguay, the Chaco has only one paved road and contains less than 4 percent of the nation's 3.3 million residents. Professor John Hoyt Williams of Indiana State University, who has written widely on Paraguay, said that the Chaco "has perhaps changed ecologically less than any other sizable area of the earth's surface."

The wonder is that the Chaco was not despoiled years ago. Early in this century land barons from Argentina and the United States owned millions of its acres. Foreign oil companies drilled hundreds of exploratory wells. And after oil was discovered at the foothills of the Bolivian Andes, Paraguay and Bolivia fought a bloody three-year war in the Chaco, under the illusion that it was rich in oil reserves.

In retrospect, the Chaco War of 1932-35 man generals, Belgian rifles, British bombers and Italian gunboats. Indians brought down from the Andes battled Guarani Indians with grenades and flamethrowers for control of waterholes. Tanks and armored cars, bogged down in the mud, were destroyed by horse-drawn cannons. In many skirmishes the machete proved more effective than the machine gun.

Yet there was nothing comic about the conflict, which left 85,000 dead as a result of thirst, hunger and summer temperatures that soar well above 100 degrees.

PARAGUAY won the war, and with it possession of two-thirds of the Chaco Boreal, but it never discovered oil. To this day only the Mennonites - who emigrated from Canada beginning in 1926, unaware that Paraguay invited them in the hope of populating the disputed territory as a buffer against Bolivian territorial ambitions - have settled in the region in any real numbers. About 12,000 Mennonites live in dozens of tiny villages scattered throughout three contiguous colonies around Filadelfia.

There are Filadelfias elsewhere in Latin America, including Bolivia, Colombia and Costa Rica, all of them apparently named after the city mentioned in the Bible. (Passages in the Book of Revelation refer to the city of Philadelphia — Filadelfia is the Spanish spelling — in Asia Minor, the seat of an early Christian church.)

In contrast to most Paraguayans, who are mixture of Spanish and Guarani Indian, the Mennonites tend to be light skinned and fair haired. And they speak a German dialect far more often than they speak Spanish or Guarani, Paraguay's national languages.

The streets of Filadelfia bear such names as Friedhofstrasse and Harbinerstrasse. Most books in the combination librarybookstore are written in German. Instruction in the modern elementary school is provided almost entirely in German, as is much of the instruction in the high school and at the teacher-training institute. Motion pictures shown locally are provided by the West German Embassy in Asunción. And Lufthansa posters outnumber those of General Alfredo Stroessner, the 71-year-old dic-tator who has ruled Paraguay for 30 years and whose dour visage is plastered on acres of wall space in every corner of the country.

German is not the only foreign language spoken in Filadelfia. "Every year at Easter we have a garhering of English speakers in the colony, and we always get more than 100 people," said Jacob Harder, a Filadelfia schoolteacher who graduated from college in Canada. Less than 10 percent of the colony's high school graduates attend college, he said, since the Mennonite religion encourages its followers to become farmers. But some Filadelfians study abroad, and one of Filadelfia's two doctors graduated from medical school in Buenos Aires.

Why would a traveler come to such a remote, bucolic place? Curiosity. mostly. But also because Filadelfia, with its communal government, is an interesting anachronism. It is a settlement where crime is virtually unknown. It is one of the dwindling number of communities that still do not have television. And it is one of the few communities whose only telephone connection with the outside world is at the central exchange.

Moreover, travel agencies in Asunción will book hunting or photography expedi-tions into the Chaco, using Filadelfia as the base for excursions of anywhere from two days to a week. But another reason to visit Filadelfia is the opportunity to observe a community of industrious men and women who take pride in their work and take pride at having overcome so much adversity.

F Filadelfia is hardly being overrun by tourists, the outside world is gradually making calls on it. Enough businessmen and merchants have found their way to the village in recent years for the community to have built the Hotel Florida, a spotiessly clean red-brick building that serves hearty meals, including generous portions of steak, rice and beans. Liquor is taboo, but the hotel and the other restaurant sell a popular Paraguayan beer called Pilsen Dorada. Moreover, many products from the outside world are sold in the cooperative store in the center of town. Among them: Flying Man sewing machines from China and refrigerators from Brazil as well as Honda motorcycles and Toshiba fans.

All these products are transported over the Trans-Chaco Highway, built in the 1960s. The road is the economic lifeline of the Chaco, used by the Mennonites not only for imports but also for the export of cotton, cattle and peanuts. Yet despite its impressive name, and despite official claims to the contrary, the highway is paved for less than half its 500-mile length. So, during the rainy season, from January through March, the unpaved portions of the road are transformed into rivers of red mud and the Trans-Chaco is impassable for days at a time.

I made the journey during the dry season, aboard the rickety bus that leaves Asunción at 5:30 each morning. The dry season not-withstanding, it raimed steadily for several hours, and water poured through the roof of the vehicle. The first few times the bus pulled into rest stops it looked as if the 17 passengers - including a half-dozen Paraguayan cowboys, who sipped verba mate from gourds called recuerdos through silver tubes called bombillas - would be conscripted to push the vehicle out of the ankle-deep mud.

Some way, however, the bus managed to slip and slither its way back onto the main road. And when the skies brightened it was easy to appreciate the stark, quiet beauty of the great plain - a plain dotted with cactus, shrubs and trees with some of the hardest woods known.

The most prominent tree in the Chaco is the quebracho, and from its bark large amounts of tannin are extracted for making leather. A monument to the quebracho stands in the center of Filadelfia, a testimonial to the value of the tannin; its industrial use provided the Mennonites with the means to earn a living. Nearby are two Mennonite churches; the most modern is a brick structure built in 1980 that would not be out of place in any American suburb. Indeed, Filadelfia, with its dusty streets, frame houses and wooden buildings, looks the way many small towns in the American West and Middle West looked at the turn of the century.

Quiet prevails nearly everywhere in the Chaco, which contains thousands of head of cattle, but Filadelfia is perfectly still only at night. During the day, motorcycles and motorbikes - many operated by mothers transporting children to and from school - roar down unpaved streets past carts drawn by horses and oxen. At 6 A.M. whistles sound summoning workers to the local factory, then they sound again signaling lunch hour and quitting time.

Nights in the Chaco are heavenly. The air is as clear as perhaps anywhere on earth. Tropical fragrances fill the evening hours. The Southern Cross - indeed, the entire galaxy - appears to be almost within arm's reach. The skies appear to be filled with a grand fireworks show, with shooting stars falling noiselessly to earth, their silver tails sweeping the heavens.

The success of the Mennonites in settling the Chaco has inspired few other Paraguayans, most of whom still associate the region with war, hardship and jaguars.

For the foreseeable future, at least, most of the Chaco will continue along its somnolent way, accessible only to those willing to make the effort, yet far enough Off the Beaten Track to make that effort worth-

Stocks Lower on Profit-Taking NEW YORK - Prices on the New York Stock Exchange finished mixed Thursday as blue chips succumbed to profit-taking in the aftermath of Wednesday's record-breaking session. Trading was active.

After breaking through 1,400 Wednesday, the Dow Jones industrial average declined 3,90 on Thursday, to 1,399.54.

Broader market indicators also gave up ground. The New York Stock Exchange index eased 0.01 to 111.30, while Standard & Poor's 500-stock index decreased 0.14 to 192.62. The 500-stock index decreased 0.14 to 192.62. The price of an average share lost one cent.

Advances outpaced declines 854-742. Volume totaled 119 million shares, down from 129.5 million Wednesday.

After the market closed, the Federal Reserve reported that M-1, the narrowest measure of the U.S. money supply, fell $2.2 billion in the week ended Oct, 28.

Christine Callies of Dean Witter Reynolds said that after a seven-day runnin the market ran said that after a seven-day runup the market ran into some willing sellers. But she said the selling pressure would not be strong enough to reverse the uptrend, although it might slow it slightly. She noted that the best price action has been focused in the blue-chip stocks, while strength in secondary stocks has been limited. "Short-term market leadership seems to change quite frequently," she added. Recent strength has come from the financial sector, some portions of the insurance sector and from department and general-merchandise stores, she said.

"The market is in a new trading range of 1,350 to 1,425," said Kevin Keeney of Southwest Securities in Dallas. Packaging Steals Spotlight From Semiconductor Chip

By ANDREW POLLACK New York Times Service

AN FRANCISCO — It does little good to build faster and faster antomobiles if all they can drive on are dirt roads. The electronics industry is discovering that principle with regard to semiconductor chips and their packaging. For the industry has been straight to crown more and more years the industry has been striving to cram more and more circuitry onto tiny silicon chips, allowing for faster and smaller computers. But less attention was paid to the fact that electrical signals still have to be carried into and out of the chip. That function is performed by the plastic or ceramic packages in which the chips are housed. The mundane packages, which also protect the chips from damage, were much less exciting to work on than the chips themselves, and those who did were considered a lower caste among engineers. But now, the packaging is the bottle-neck, restricting efforts to in-crease the speed and shrink the size of computers.

Now the packaging is the bottleneck. limiting efforts to increase speed.

"Packaging is now a performance problem," said John J. Cox, vice president of operations of Semiconductor Research Corp., a consortium of electronics companies that finances university research on advanced microelectronic technology. "Here's this beautiful little chip and you can't get out of it what it's capable of because of the packaging."

The realization of the problem has set off a flurry of responses. Microelectronics & Computer Technology Corp., another industry research consortium, has picked packaging as one of its four major missions, along with more glamorous topics of advanced computer architectures, software and computer-aided design.

The package is what many people envision when they think of a computer chip. The chip itself is a flat piece of silicon, no bigger than a fingernal, that is etched with tmy circuits. The package around the chip is black plastic or ceramic with many metal prongs coming out of it. The most common type of package, known as a dual in-line package, resembles a centipede, with the metal prongs arranged in two rows like legs.

THE metal legs attach to the printed circuit board, which contains wires that connect to other chips and other parts of the computer, such as display screens. In turn, the chip is usually connected to the package by wires that attach to the

One problem is that as computer chips become more complex, more wires are needed to carry signals in and out of the chip. Some of the most complex chips require a few hundred such wires. It becomes increasingly difficult to place all those wires around the edge of the chip without the signals on the wires interfering with one another.

Hence, while cramming more functions onto a single chip should lead to smaller computers, that progress is partly nullified because the package around the chip must get bigger and bigger.

The package becomes "a great big overcoat, which is 10 to 20 times as big as the chip," said Barry H. Whalen, vice president and manager of the packaging program for Microelectronics &

Computer Technology Corp.

Several new types of packages have appeared on the market, and more are on the way. Instead of two rows of legs in a rectangular package, packages known as chip carriers are square and have leads around all four sides. Another idea is to put the prongs under the package, rather than just around the periphery. National Semiconductor Corp. and others are promoting a new technology called tape automated bonding. This does away

ITC Fails On Crisis Solution

Calls on Britain For 'Rescue'

Agence France-Presse LONDON — The International Tin Council has failed again to find a way of pulling the world tin mar-ket out of its crisis.

In a new development during the latest talks, which ended Thursday and which are to be resumed on Nov. 14, the ITC's six exporting members called on Britain, a tin-producing consumer member of the ITC, to provide a financial "rescue package." The aim would be to permit the orderly resumption of tin trading on the London Metal Exchange, which has been suspended since Oct. 24.

Britain alienated itself from the other members of the European community when it said it was willing to contribute its 4-percent share of the ITC's debts, which are estimated at £600 million (about $840 million).

In a statement issued at the end of the talks, the tin council, a UN agency empowered to regulate world supplies and prices of tin, said it had given "preliminary consideration" to a rescue plan pre-sented by its 16 creditors. The cred-itors planned a meeting for Friday.

The plan, which offered the metal determent of loan and interest repayments in the next 12 months, was called "unacceptable" by some importing delegates who are mem-

The exchange could now decide to prolong the suspension, which occurred when the ITC's buffer stock manager withdrew from the market because of a lack of funds to finance his operations. The suspension is in force through Friday. One of the conditions laid down by the creditors required the six exporters — Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand, Australia, Nigeria and Zaire - to produce £60 million pledged in September to the buffer stock manager.

Importing members insisted that producers should make the first move, but producers - led by Malaysia - wanted to see similar action by consumers first.

Shell Group Net Tumbled 55% In 3d Quarter

NEW YORK - The Royal Dutch/Shell Group reported Thursday that its profit tumbled 55.1 percent in the third quarter and said it may be difficult to avoid downward pressures on oil prices in early 1986.

Royal Dutch/Shell, the world's second-largest oil company after Exxon Corp., attributed its lower profits to special charges of about $280 million expenses related to its closing of a refinery in Curação, reductions in its marine fleet, a writedown of some U.S. coal assets and special incentive payments to Shell Oil Co. employees, Shell, based in Houston, is wholly owned by Royal Dutch/Shell, which has headquarters in both En-gland and the Netherlands. Profit for the third quarter fell to £439 million from £978 million a year earlier, while revenue fell 7.9

percent, to £16.95 billion from £18.41 billion pounds.
The results are distorted slightly when converted into dollars because of fluctuations in exchange rates. Based on company calculations using average exchange rates for the third quarter of this year and a year earlier, profit fell to $606 million on revenue of $23.39 bil-lion, from $1.27 billion on revenue of $23.94 billion.

In its report, Royal Dutch noted a recent rebound in crude oil prices, which it attributed to seasonally low inventories in the hands of oil companies, coupled with a reduction in oil shipments to the West by Russia, the world's largest oil producer.

Given normal winter conditions in the Northern Hemisphere. the crude oil market may well 'muddle through' for the next few months," the company said.

"But, with the adoption by most producing countries of market-re-lated prices designed to regain or maintain market share, it may be difficult to avoid downward price pressures developing in the first quarter of 1986."

For the first nine months of the year, profit fell 20.8 percent although revenue increased 3.5 per-cent, Shell said. Profit dropped to while revenue increased to £55.16 billion from £53.25 billion.

When converted into dollars, as computed by the company on the basis of exchange rates in each of the first three quarters, profit fell to $2.63 billion from $3.77 billion, and revenue fell to $68.73 billion from $73.42 billion. Shell said that the underlying performance of its core oil and gas business improved relative to its manufacturing, marine and mar-keting operations. (AP, Reuters)

New FSLIC Unit Is Expected to Borrow Money

Washington Post Service DALLAS — The Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. is expected to use the institution it created this week to borrow money against $3.1 billion in real estate and other assets the insurance fund has taken over from failed institutions, sources in the industry say.

The new organization, called the Federal Asset Disposition Association, would funnel about $2.6 billion to FSLIC and use $500 million for operations and debt service while deciding how to dispose of the assets that would bring in the most cash. according to sources at a con-vention of the U.S. League of Savings Institutions.

Although final decisions on how the new organization will work have not been made, the plan for borrowing funds probably from the Federal Home Loan banks — appears to be the most likely scenario.

The idea for the new organization was conceived by a group of thrift industry leaders. and its petition for a federal charter was approved by the Federal Home Loan Bank

Chrysler Restructures Operations

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches DETROIT - Chrysler Corp. announced Thursday a reorganization that will create a corporate umbrella, run by the chairman, Lee A. Iacocca, and four separate oper-

The realignment appears to remove Mr. Iacocca farther from Chrysler's core business of cars and trucks. The automotive unit is to be called Chrysler Motors and will be headed by Chrysler's current vice chairman, Gerald C. Greenwald

The three other units of Chrysler are to be known as Chrysler Financial Corp., Gulfstream Aerospace group, and a new group, Chrysler chnologies.

The automaker, in a statement released by Mr. Iacocca, said it was "studying the possibility of formalizing the restructuring to make Chrysler Corp. legally a holding

Banking Changes Are to Be Gradual In Hong Kong

HONG KONG - Local banks and financial institutions will be granted a transition period of about two years to comply with the proposed reform of Hong Kong's anking laws, David Nendick, the secretary of monetary affairs, said

But he said some new provisions may come into effect earlier than others to allow flexibility for the upervisory system.

The government of the British colony will give the financial community adequate time to discuss the bill before it is enacted, he said. The draft bill is expected to be published by early next year.

A consensus on new requirements emerged in June, after the Hong Kong government took over Overseas Trust Bank Ltd., the second bank rescued since 1983.

Some banks and deposit-taking companies, however, have said they might be forced to move their business out of Hong Kong if the new, more stringent rules become law. "We don't want to take advantage of the present situation, where there is the mood for change, to rush through the legislation," said Mr. Nendick, a Bank of England pificial who took over as Hong-Kong's secretary of monetary affairs Wednesday after the retire- nature of Edison's product plans or ment of Douglas Blye.

The changes announced Thursday have been approved by Chryslet's directors, but the possible reformation of Chrysler-as a parent holding company needs the stockholders' approval.

"We are modernizing the company's structure to enable us to manage our businesses better," Mr. 12cocca said. "Chrysler is a growing company, expanding its operations and becoming more international and complex. We can no longer continue to run it like a North American car-and-truck compa-

Sources close to the company said the reorganization was intended to reflect Chrysler's recent and planned diversification to lessen its dependence on cars and trucks. They said the plan had been in the works for months and had been revised and delayed several times. It was unclear what type of corporate entity is being created to oversee the operating units of the company or whether Chrysler plans to offer separate categories of stock, as General Motors has done in the case of certain acquisitions... However, the move does give the company's different lines of business separate identities.

Chrysler this year has spent more than $1 billion in acquiring Gulfstream Aerospace of Savannah, Georgia, a corporate-jet maker, and financial-services units from

Bank of America, E.F. Hutton & Co. and Genetal Electric Co.

The sources said the new technology subsidiary apparently would include Chrysler's Huntsville, Alabama, electronics operation and future high-technology acquisitions.

Mr. Iacocca in recent years has gradually been turning over day-today control of the automotive business to Mr. Greenwald, who was among the first of the Ford Motor Co. executives hured to Chrysler by Mr. Iacocca.

"Greenwald will literally be running the car company on his own," said Baron Bates, a Chrysler

But the move inevitably will focus attention on Chrysler's longterm prospects without Mr. Ia-cocca, 61. Colleagues say he is spending more and more time in New York, where the Statue of Liberty fund-raising effort that he heads is based. The new arrangement appears to free him even further from the demands of Detroit.

"if there's a perception that he's withdrawing from the car company, it's going to hurt sales," said Douglas A. Fraser, the retired pres-ident of the United Auto Workers and a former Chrysler board member, who said he had no knowledge of the reorganization. "From Chrysler's point of view, it's not very wise to get him too far re-(LAT, UPI)

GM to Eliminate White-Collar

New York Times Service DETROIT - General Motors Corp. is notifying most of its white-collar workers that beginning Jan. 1 it will eliminate their automatic cost-of-living Analysts view the move as a way of cutting white-collar overhead. Joseph Phillippi of E.F. Hutton, said that with the lifting of the voluntary quotas on Japanese imports early this year and "the Japanese adding production here in the U.S., as well as new competition from Korea, Taiwan and Yugoslavia, this is where the battle is going to be in the second half of the

Italy Debates Future of Mediobanca Boeing Sells

By Andrew Hurst Reuters

MILAN - A move to dismiss a director of Italy's leading merchant bank has triggered a dispute be-tween private industrialists and the government.

Enrico Cuccia, 78, the director, has run the influential government-controlled Mediobanca SpA since 1946. Under his guidance, Mediobanca has carved out a unique role, weaving alliances between industri-al families in return for key holdings in private companies, such as Fiat and Olivetti.

Last month, the state industry minister, Clelio Darida, called for Mr. Cuccia to leave the bank.

Private industrialists, who regard Mr. Cuccia as a guardian of their interests, oppose his departure until the bank's strategy has been clearly mapped out. Mr. Cuccia devised an arrangement in the 1950s giving state and private shareholders — among them Giovanni Ag-nelli of Fiat SpA and Leopoldo Pirelli of Pirelli SpA — an equal say on the board, even though private capitalists have only a small stake in the bank,

Mr. Darida, backed by the dominant Christian Democratic Party, has cited Mr. Cuccia's age as grounds for retirement. Istituto Ricostruzione Industriale, the government holding company with the majority interest in Mediobanca, has a mandatory retirement age of ed to private interests. "IRI, that is the state, must surrender control of Mediobanca to private interests in exchange for fresh capital." he was quoted as saying in the daily newspaper Corriere della Sera.

Some analysis say the industrialists are worried that, with Mr. Cuccia gone, Mediobanca's strategic holdings in their companies would fall into less sympathetic hands. Cesare Romiti, managing direc-

Actual prices for OPEC oil would continue to float up and down with the free market. Until recently, Saudi Arabia was alone among OPEC members in rigidly adhering to official prices, and buyers turned elsewhere for

In September, the kingdom confirmed that it would make its oil competitive again by selling to some customers under a "netback system." The netback system bases market value of refined products, crude to cheaper supplies from Iraq such as gasoline and heating oil. Netback sales, which currently total slightly more than one million barrels a day, are limited to oil companies that have their own refining and marketing networks and agree not to dump the oil on the spot market.

So far, Japanese companies have been excluded from netback sales because their government artificialsets oil-product prices. Sheikh amani said.

But he said that thought was being given to how Saudi Arabia might offer some sort of marketrelated price to the Japanese, who the price of crude on the current have begun switching from Saudi and Iran.

Because oil-product prices have risen recently, Sheikh Yamani said, the number price of Saudi crude has climbed to within $1 of the kingdom's official prices, which are based on a rate of $28 a barrel for Arab light, a key grade. "I won't be surprised if in the winter I reach my official [price] and go beyond that, though for a short period," the minister said.

He also said that Saudi Arabia "most probably" would not use oil to help pay for its planned pur-chase of Tornado military jets from Britain. An oil-barter payment had porated in 1934. Mr. Hartigan, in a statement is-sued at the airline's headquarters in Chicago, said the order would meet United's fleet needs into the 1990s.

On news of the sale, Boeing's shares rose to close at $47.25 on the New York Stock Exchange, up 75 cents from Wednesday. Shares of UAL Inc., parent of United Airlines, moved ahead 87.5 cents to $50.50.

The order calls for delivery of 110 Boeing 737-300s, the most modern of the Boeing short-range aircraft, and six long-range 747-200 jumbo jets by the end of 1990.

Under the agreement, some of the six Boeing 747-200s could be exchanged for delivery of Boeing's most modern 747-400 model, which is more fuel-efficient, has a longer range and requires only a two-member cockpit crew, instead of three, a United spokesman said. He said the first 20 Boeing 737s and two of the six Boeing 747s were to be delivered by June 1988, With the order. United is expected to have 478 jet aircraft operating through its system.

The sale of Pan Am's operations over the Pacific to United, announced in May, had been ap-proved tentatively Oct. 11 by Elizabeth Hanford Dole, the secretary of transportation. Apparently she was not swayed by arguments since then by the Justice Department and a number of airlines that the arrangement would be anti-competitive. "United will confront a more competitive market when this transaction is completed than exists today," she said Thursday.

She has contended that United, because of its domestic feed system and a concentration of major hubs in the West, might be the only airline to vigorously compete with Japan Air Lines, now the largest carrier crossing the Pacific.

U.S. competitors have complained that the acquisition from Pan Am will make United a dominant carrier in the rapidly growing Pacific market.

The airline has said it would be ready by the end of November to take over Pan Am's Pacific routes, along with 18 of Pan Am's widebodied jets and its ground opera-

Pranay Gupte is naive if he imagines that the old priest in the Golden Temple who blessed him with "a gentle smile" is in control of the Khalistan movement, or if he expects us to believe in the Sikh woman encountered on a plane who is reading a volume of verse, conveniently marked at Tagore's famous poem "Where the Mind is Without Fear," which every schoolchild in India knows by heart. To separate the communities into the goodies and the baddies as in a Bombay film will neither elucidate nor edify. It creates more of the communal tension that he deplores and we, in India, fear.

Mrs. Gandhi comes in for such harsh criticism in his commentary on the political scene, whether in Punjab, Kashmir or Andhra Pradesh, that one feels it is the raison d'être of this book. It takes one by surprise, therefore, when he goes on to describe India's industrial and economic front in glowing terms. Apparently this is because he chose to interview only those at the helm, as they say, of industry; such huminaries as the chairman of the Great Eastern Shipping Company, the editor of India's leading magazine, India Today, the chairman of India's Nuclear Power Board, a senior meinber of the Oil and Natural Gas Commission and so on. Although initially dubious about Rajiv Gandhi's ability to rule, Gupte. on seeing his first budget with its nit away from the public towards the private sector, exults, "I was disbelieving at first because no Indian administration had ever been so bold in rooting for the private sector, and, of course, I was lighted at the new economic direction in Brata is in fact very good when describing the minutiae of this hierarchy and its cumber-It is clear Gupte did not share the shock or dismay of those who searched the budget to so, what was being done for the poor and the weak. It is telling that he interviewed no single labor union leader, let alone a laborer. Glory Days at Green Bay: An Older Kramer Remembers 'the Block' The Block has been replayed so many times walks into the huddle taking requests. It is an almost feel the raw and bitter bow cool is that?)

WASHINGTON - If you were to compile a list of the most memorable plays in National Football League history, these four would make it: Alan Ameche's touchdown run that gave the 1958 Baltimore Colts a sudden-death championship over the New York Giants in what still is called "The Greatest Game Ever Played;" the "Immaculate Reception" by Franco Harris of the Pittsburgh Steelers, Dwight Clark's catch that sent the San Francisco 49ers to Super Bowl XVI, and Bart Starr following Jerry Kramer's block into the end zone to score on fourth and one with 13 seconds left, beating Dallas in the 1967 NFL championship.

Alth, The Block

Kramer still hears about it. He was in San Francisco a couple of years ago, about to cross a street, when the driver of a car rolled down his window and called out, "Jerry Kramer?" "Right," Kramer acknowledged.

"Great block." Kramer kept a diary of that 1967 season that he called "Instant Replay." He is back now with the same co-author, Dick Schaap, and a similar title, "Distant Replay," a warm reminiscence and how hard it is to express, and about creeping anonymity, and how hard it is to face.

Kramer writes of a recent conversation he had with his beloved teammate, Fuzzy Thurston; "We started talking about depressing things, about growing old and being forgotten, and Fuzzy said something I'll always remember. You know, Jerry, nobody wants to be Fuzzy anymore.' It captured in six words the sadness of being an ex-athlete, the loss, the word. When we were young, when we were champions, everyone envied us. Everyone wanted to know us.

Everyone wanted to be us. It wasn't just the kids cal talent, not heart, not brains. How many in the schoolyard shouting, Tm Paul Hornung! would not be spit out by the computer as too T'm Fuzzy Thurston!' It was the schoolteachers, too, and the lawyers and the stockbrokers. Professional football was a soaring sport, and we were its soaring stars. We were everybody's heroes, and we knew it would never end."

What a team that was. Six Hall of Famers: Starr, Jim Taylor, Ray Nitschke, Willie Davis, Forrest Gregg, Herb Adderley. Seven, counting the revered coach, Vince Lombardi. And Hornung, Thurston, Kramer, Max McGee, Willie Wood, etc., etc. "Perfection isn't attainable,"

How much the game has changed. Kramer, flat-faced, ham-fisted man, was a 225-pound (102-kilogram) guard when he reported to the Packers in 1958. Horning ran a five-second-flat 40 yards (36.5 meters). "We weren't big, and we weren't fast," Kramer said. "I look at today's players and I'm awed and confused. They're so nped up, so awesome. Where's the valve? They've got to have a valve somewhere, where you put the air in."

How many of the great old Packers would definitely make the NFL today? Just on physiwould not be spit out by the computer as too weak, too small, too slow?

Kramer thought about it, and after a while he

"Herb Adderley would make it," Kramer said convincingly, and he did not push the list any longer than one.

But it is apples and oranges, is it not? Those Packers were right for their time, and perhaps no single play better exemplified what they were about as a team than the one that brought Starr and Kramer into history.

16-below-zero temperature (minus 26.6 degrees Celsius) they played in. We can close our eyes a suggestion. I might want a trap: Fuzzy might and remember how condensation turned the want to go off tackle; the ends might want a players' breath to fog that rose like papal smoke quick slant, or a post, Everybody's got an idea. into the mean air.

Since two timeouts preceded the play, each team had ample time to prepare for the game's climactic snap. Today's fan would doubtless assume the specific play was called on the sideine and given to Starr by the forceful Lombardi. In fact, during the first timeout, Lombardi suggested that the ball be handed to fullback Chuck ercein for the "44-dive," but he left the final decision to Starr, who called his own plays.

The way Kramer tells it, "we were ready to huddle when the second timeout was called. Bart went over to talk with Coach, but he came back rather quickly because Coach was out of plays. Bart came back empty. No new suggestion. Zero. We huddle and Bart says, 'Has any-body got anything? Anybody?' "

(Fourth and goal from the one. Dynastic Green Bay left with one last play, trailing, 17-14. The NFL's most celebrated team coached by its most celebrated man, and the quarterback

"Normally, in that situation, everybody's got But in this particular situation, 10 guys looked down and checked their shoeshines. Not a sound. Not one sound.

"And Bart asked again, 'Anybody? Anybody got anything?

Finally, Gale Gillingham, playing on the left side next to Fuzzy, he says, 'Run it between Jerry and Forrest. They'll get it for us." Gilly volunteered me. I couldn't back out of it then. Not hardly." Starr said he would run the play, "61-wedge," and because the field was frozen, a slippery sheet of ice, he would keep the ball himself rather than risk handing it off to either Mercein or Donny Anderson.

Kramer laid The Block on the defensive line-an all-the-time thing; you don't win once in a while. You don't do things right once in a while; you do them right all the time. There's no room man Jethro Pugh, Starr nudged into the end for second place here. There's a second-place zone, Green Bay had its third straight NFL bowl game, and it's a hinky-dinky football bowl game, and it's a hinky-dinky football championship and fame was a bottomless cup.

"Winning is not a sometime thing here," Lombardi often admonished his players. "It's place is: hinky-dinky."

Soviet Men Win Team Title At Gymnastics Championship

MONTREAL - The Soviet Union, getting excellent optional routines Wednesday night from Yuri Korolev and Vladimir Artemov, reclaimed the men's team title at the World Gymnastics Championship as 1983 champion China finished second.

The Soviet Union scored 585.65 points in two rounds of competition on the floor, pommel horse, rings, vault, parallel bars and high bar. China, rallying from fourth place after Monday's team compulsories, got a perfect 10.0 from Tong Fei and three scores of 9.90 from Li Ning to win the silver medal with 582.60 points.

That bumped East Germany to third with a total of 581.05 and Japan to fourth at 579.70, but the Chinese could not overcome the Soviet Union's nearly four-point Korolev was third with 117.50 points, followed by teammate Valentin Mogilnyi at 117.10 and Li at 116.95. China's Xu Zhiqiang was sixth with 116.90 and Japan's Olympic champion, Koji Gushi-ken, was seventh at 116.55.

The Chinese, who had 293.15 points in the optionals to the Soviet Unions' 292.50, still were angry Wednesday night that they had been assigned to do their compulsory exercises Monday in the first group that morning, when the judges usually mark lower. Money-for-Play at Kentucky Alleged

NEW YORK (AP) - Dave Batton, a former basketball player at Notre Dame, has said he was offered $20,000 by Seth Hancock, the owner of Claiborne Farm, to attend the University of Kentucky, according to Sports Illustrated magazine. Batton, in the issue published Wednesday. said he was offered the money in October 1973 in return for four summers' work on the famous thoroughbred farm; Hancock denied the

The Lexington Herald-Leader has reported that several former basketball players at Kentucky told the newspaper they received payments of $50 and $100 from boosters, and more for making public appearances.

At Denver's Golf Courses, the Rule Is Putt Up or Shove Off

DENVER - For golfers who have suffered through those maddening 5- and 6-hour rounds, Denver city officials have a cure.

It is called "don't-dawdle golf." The concept is simple: you either play within a certain time limit or you are told to leave the course. "All it takes is guts and an administration that will back you up," said Denver's director of golf, Charles Lind. "I would say 99.8 percent of the golfers like the idea. And if any complaints got to the mayor, I never heard about Denver began applying its speeded-up play rule early this season at two of its public courses. Wellshire and Kennedy, where it was not uncommon to take six hours to

Looking for a New Car

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — For the past several months I have been trying to buy a new car. I should have got it hought months ago, but buying a car has presented paralyzing psychological problems.

Foremost among these is the price. Not having bought a new car since 1969. I was astounded to find that nowadays $24,000 is not considered a piratical price tag in the United States for a car of modest proportions. This discovery sent me reeling home, where I stayed secluded in the den for days trying to devise a new philosophy of mon-ey in which a $24,000 automobile might seem like a sensible purchase despite its lacking three bedrooms, a dining room and a club cellar.

You don't know what a club cellar is? Then you are probably too young to believe that $22,000 once bought a brick house containing the above-mentioned three bedrooms, dining room and club cellar. plus an attic. parlor, kitchen, two baths, two small back sitting rooms upstairs and down, and a garage in one of the tonier neighborhoods of northwest Washington.

To be sure, that house was not mounted on four radial all-weather tires, nor powered by a turbo-charged six-cylinder gasoline en-gine, but if I had wanted it so rigged it could probably have been done for no more than an additional $1.500.

Well. I am talking 1956, of course, and this dinky machine priced at $24,000 was 1985, and during the interval Arabs and Vietnamese have had their way with the dollar, Still --

Dealing with car salesmen. posed a different kind of problem. Although I feared the idea of car salesmen when I entered the buying process. I soon came to like them. They seemed like such regular guys, always eager to send the customer off for a nice test drive.

Why don't you take it for a test drive?" they invariably said as soon as I asked them to open up the car trunk. Apparently customers who want to inspect the trunk are regarded as lively prospects. Don't ask me why. All I want to know is, does the car have a jack?

When the salesman says, "And this Dream of Paradise XK-890 over here can be yours for only

"Let's open the trunk."
He does not have to know I have fear of jacklessness, and since I choose not to mention this odd condition to an utter stranger he probably thinks. "Anybody interested in humdrum detail like the trunk has to be ready to buy."

In any case, he counters with, "Why don't you take it for a test

There are plenty of reasons why I don't want to take it for a test drive. For one, I have no intention of buying any car that costs more than a three-bedroom house, so what is the point of driving the thing? For another. I have driven cars long enough to know that no car will reveal its darkest, innermost secrets until it has known you for approximately 25,000 miles. Nevertheless, I always take the test drive now, out of consideration for the salesman's feelings. Last May, when I started shopping, I declined the first test drive that was offered, and it seemed to embarrass

"What's the point?" I asked. "A great test pilot could probably wring this thing out and determine whether it's a lemon or not, but with a driver as lousy as me, you'd just be risking a ridiculously overpriced car."

I am not joking about being a very poor driver, so my motives here may have more fear in them than one cares to admit. It would be a distinct embarrassment to total a $24,000 machine on a test drive while experimenting with its ability to recover smartly after running off the road shoulder, a testdrive maneuver suggested by the author of a book I studied on how to buy a car.

What I usually do is drive the car a couple of blocks away from the dealer's shop, park at the curb and unlock the trunk to see if it has a jack, then listen to the radio for a respectable length of time. So far I have brought all test-drive cars back without a dent. Psychologically. I'm ready now to live with the fact that the car won't have a club cellar, but if there's no jack. I could be badly shattered.

The Hasidic Way of Life

Writer Explores Her Roots During Five Years of Research In Zealously Religious Community in New York

By Joseph Berger
New York Times Service
NEW YORK — When Lis Harris decided to write about a Hasidic family, some of her friends tried to shoo her away from the than one friend saying of the Hasidim.

Harris plunged in anyway, and after five years of spending dozens of Sabbaths and assorted holidays, weddings and births with the family and their Lubavitch community in the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn, she developed an affection for many of the zealously religious people she came to know. To her surprise, she also found that the kernel of Jewish identity within herself, often dormant, had begun to quicken.

Her portrait of Hasidism was recently published as "Holy Days: The World of a Hasidic Family" (Summit Books, $16.95), a book that attempts to give a human, down-to-earth texture to a group that many, even secular Jews, regard as a mystery. In an interview at her office at The New Yorker, where she has worked as a staff writer and at other jobs for 19 years. Harris described how writing the book allowed her to reach her own religious

Not that Harris will become a Hasid herself. But in the middle of her research, Harris, a Bennington College graduate and the daughter of thoroughly secular and assimilated Jewish parents, found herself taking her children, Nick and David, now 9 and 7 years old, to synagogue on Yom Kippur.

"I want my children to be attached to Judaism." she said. "I would like them to find a place where they can make sense out of what's going on.'

Her husband, the novelist John Bowers, was reared in a Baptist home, but Harris said that he was not a practicing Baptist and not so concerned about passing that religious identity on to the children. "He knows that I want Judaism to be carried forward." she said. Harris also said that as a result of her research, she felt compelled to visit Israel. Until she began the book, Harris said, her knowledge of Judaism and her familiarity with more observant Jewish ancestors amounted to "a kind of gray blob in my memory bank." Writing the book allowed her to feel "attached to that history."

She realized, for example, the extent to which Judaism had shaped her character. "Some of my differentness has to do with being a Jew." she said. "We all have natures, and part of that nature, part of my disposition of being apart, may be the condition of being a Jew, and I never imagined that be-

Because of her research, she said, she has also come to feel an almost "[amilial protectiveness" toward the Hasidim.

"Some people don't like them and I don't like many things about them," she said, "but what I think more about the Hasidim is that they almost disappeared from the earth dur-ing World War II, and for me it's partly an act of restoration to write this book, to say they are here and this is what they're doing."
Harris began her research in 1979, motivated partly by a desire to understand what being a Jew meant to her. "My Jewish identi-ty had been fuzzily formed," she said. She noted that in her father's hometown of Norwich. Connecticut, the Jews were so absorbed into the secular life around them that the stones in the Jewish graveyard bear typically New England first names like Abby and

"There was a lot of ambivalence," she said. "I wanted to look at a passionate version of Judaism, one that was everyday, and the Hasidim seemed to be such an obvious exam-

The bearded, dark-hatted Hasidic men and the bewigged, modestly garbed women are distinctive from other Orthodox Jews because they believe in a more impassioned, joyous and mystical expression of Judaism and they adhere to the guidance of a revered spiritual leader, their rebbe.

Lubavitchers are followers of a rabbinic dynasty that once had its seat in the Byelorussian town of Lubavitch.

Through the aid of Lubavitcher officials, Harris was put in touch with a family willing to let her into their lives; she disguised the couple's names, calling them Moshe and Sheina Konigsberg. She quickly found that she liked the Lubavitchers' love of talk and their intelligence. And while the group strikes some outsiders as grim, she relished their sense of humor,

As a woman, she had more access to the women in the community, and even im-mersed herself in a women's mikvah, the ritual bath women use after menstruation. She came to understand that the custom does not imply, as commonly thought, that a menstructing woman is unclean, but that her immersion readies her for the holiness of sex

"I feel like a new bride every month," Sheina Konigsberg told her.

Lis Harris

The men were less accessible. But she concluded that this was natural for a group that does not encourage relaxed socializing between the sexes.

She deplores that Hasidic women receive what she feels is a second-rate education. However, she came to believe that it is wrong for her to impose modern feminist views on women who seem to be happy with their lives.
"You can't say they shouldn't have the happiness they want, when they want it," she said. She did not share the Lubavitchers' conservative politics nor their view that modern-day materialism and sensuality are cutting people off from their ideal humanity. While her rebellious nature warmed to the way Hasidim turned their back on conventional society, she was not comfortable, she said, with the conformity and the veneration for the rebbe.

To help her understand the Hasidic commitment to the commandments written in the Torah, Moshe Konigsberg compared life to a new Volkswagen in which God's instructions are contained in the driver's manual. To try to drive as one chooses and ignore the manual's instructions, as, he argued, modern secular people do, will cause the car to break down. But, Harris recalls thinking, "There are a lot of cars besides a Volkswagen."

Since the Lubavitchers are distinct among other Hasidim for their aggressive efforts to get other jews to become observant, Harris believes that their encounter with her, despite her reawakened spirituality, was disappoint-ing. "They think they failed with me," she said.
